The Ogden Union Depot and Railroad company compromised a $15,000 damage sult with Charles W. Peck for $4,000 for the loss of an eye.

The action was brought by Mr. Peck through his atotrney, C. C. Richards, against the company last November. It was at that time that Mr. Peck was proute east from California, and had just stepped from the Southern Pacific train going to his car on the Rio Grande Western, when a company of soldiers from Fort Douglas were passing through Ogden, and to have some fun between train times, placed blank carridges on the rails, which exploded when engines or cars passed over them, One of these cartridges exploded just as Mr. Peck was passing, and a piece of the shell struck him in the right eye, so injuring the member that it had to be removed, and he brought the suit to ver damages for the loss of the eye. Remedial measures against the codling moth are those from which little or no benefit is derived except that of saving the fruit from attacks of the insect, says Farmers' Bulletin, No. 171 of the Department of Agriculture.

It is sometimes as well to know what not to use against an insect as it is to know what to use. The following remedies have been at various times suggested and have been found to be of little or no value: Moth balls hung in the trees and supposed to keep moths. away; smudging orchards with illsmelling compounds; plugging the trees with sulphur; plugging the roots with calomel; banding trees with tarred paper to keep the larvae from crawling up the tree; trap lanterns; baiting the moths with mixture of vinegar and molasses; spraying with ill-smelling compounds; spraying with water; and electric lights as a repellant of the moth. tric lights as a repellant of the moth.

These so-called remedies have been tried so often that a fruit-grower is simply wasting his time and money when he uses them.

The efficiency of sprays against this

The efficiency of sprays against this insect was discovered in spraying for canker worms, which feed upon the leaves of the apple. Since that time the machinery and the solutions used in spraying have been greatly improved, and now this method is well known to be the best and most efficient.

Many farmers have a deeply rooted objection to spraying on general principles. They have never sprayed, and many of them are proud of the fact that they do not spray their orchards, even if they do lose the larger part of their fruit which otherwise might have been saved. The more progressive and been saved. The more progressive and business-like apple growers are the staunchest advocates of spraying, and their efforts are uniformly successful. Experience gained by several years of spraying always brings about greater efficiency and a reduction of expenses. A furit-grower who wishes to begin spraying can well afford to study the spraying operations in other orchards and familiarize himself with the general methods. The arsenical sprays contain arsenic

The arsenical sprays contain arsenic as the poisonous ingredient. There are several of the spraying compounds upon the market and many others which the fruit grower can prepare himself.

Paris green is probably the best known of these arsenicals. It is a definite chemical compound of arsenic, copper and acetic acid and should have a uniform composition. It is a rather a uniform composition. a uniform composition. It is a rather coarse powder and has the fault of set-tling rapidly. In the East it costs 29 cents a pound, while in the West the cost is 25 cents. Paris green may be prepared for praying as follows:

 Paris green

 Lime

 100 to 250

The lime should be fresh and should be slacked in quantites as needed. Mix the Paris green with a little water un-til a paste is formed, and then add this to the required amount of water, to which the lime has been added. A good average strength to use is 1 pound to 150 gallons, but is must be weaker on trees with delicate foliage, such as peach. Many fruit-growers are using it on apple trees as strong as 1 pound to 100 gallons. Any of the other arsenical sprays can be used.

The spray should be applied to the leaves and foliage so that a thin coating will remain after the water has evaporated. To do this the spray should be applied with great force so as to form a dense mist. At all times the solution in the tank should be kept thoroughly agirated enecedably if Paris thoroughly agitated, especially if Paris green is used. Probably the most rapid progress in spraying can be made in the following way: Drive the outfit the following way: Drive the outfit between two rows and spray half of each tree in each row. The routes followed in an orchard should be gov-erned by the position of the water sup-ply. If the wind is blowing it is best to go parrallel with it rather than at arrhoea and summer complaint,

The most important consideration in The time of application for the codling moth should depend entirely upon the stage of the insect, as the greatest efficiency is obtained by spraying just when the larvae are entering the fruit when the larvae are entering the fruit or immediately before. The sprayings are directed against the first genera-tion of the codling moth. Two of these sprayings are advised, one a few days after the blossoms have fallen and be-fore the calyx closes, and the other two weeks to a month later, when the larvae are entering the fruit. In cases of bad infection, when the preventive measures have been neglected, other sprayings may be added.

The later sprayings are directed against the later sprayings are directed

The later sprayings may be added.

The later sprayings are directed against the larvae of the later generations when they are entering the fruit. The second generation enters the fruit varies with the locality, and the seasons, in the same locality, but it is easily found by watching the fruit for the first new contents. The larvae of the second generation usually begin to enter the last week of July, and the majority enter in August, while a few enter in September. The number of sprayings to be made against this second generation depends upon the efficiency of the preventive measures and the early sprayings. Two sprayings are usually sufficient; but if infestation is bad, three should be made.

Light showers have but little effect in washing away the spray, but a concoons. The larvae of the second gen-

Light showers have but little effect in washing away the spray, but a continued rain or a heavy shower makes it necessary to repeat the spraying. The lead arsenate is less affected by rain than the other compounds.

The young larvae are killed by the poison they eat before they have entered the fruit. They get it in the calyx, on the sides of the fruit, or on the leaves. Recent work tends to show that a great many get the poison by nibbling the poisoned leaves.

RANDING

BANDING. The use of bands to trap the fullgrown larvae of this insect was the only remedial measure of value before the use of arsenic sprays was dis-covered. When an orchard has been given good care, preventive measures have been fully carried out, and spraying is thoroughly done, it is unnecessary to use bands. If, however, the sary to use bands. If, however, the trees are old, have cracks and holes in the trunks and branches, and are close together, so that the spraying can not be well done, it is quite necessary to use these bands; or if it is desired to bring the insect under control in a badly infested orchard, the bands can be used with good success as an additional preventive.

Banding for this insect in general is simply offering a good place, in which the larvae will spin its cocoon and killing it after it has done so. Cloth bands, from 10 to 12 inches in width, are folded once lengthwise and placed around the tree. They can be fastened in such a way as to be easily removed and replaced by driving a nail through the ends and then nipping off the head at an angle so as to leave a sharp point. If a tree is leave a hard the ends and then nipping off the head at an angle so as to leave a sharp point. If a tree is large, one band should be placed on the trunk and one on each of the larger limbs. Cloth bands of any heavy, dark-colored stuff are much preferable to bands of hay or paper. When bands are used, other places in which the larvae might spin cocoons should be destroyed or rendered unsuitable. It is, of course, a most important point that be destroyed. To accomplish this the at intervals of ten days. At best, banding is but little effective in badly infested localities if used alone, but it is a most valuable adjunct to spraying.
